Is That You, 'Rona'?

By Cyndi Tumlin, CCR, RPR • President-Alabama Court Reporters Association

Cyndi Tumlin
ACRA President

Okay. Let's be honest here. Show of hands to all that apply.

Who thought 2020 was going to be promising and the start of a new decade and looking forward to the future? Who had ever used "social" and "distancing" as if it were a perfectly normal word grouping? Who talked about "flattening the curve," but you weren't talking about your own personal size or shape? Who dreamed of a future where videoconferencing was a happening thing in our everyday court and deposition world and that being "in person" was something unheard of and to be avoided?

And one more – my personal favorite – Who else's subconscious thought that being sent home from work due to the Covid-19 meant eat everything that you had in your house (because you had to stockpile food like never before) and put on 19 pounds? Let's just leave the whole toilet paper issue back in March.

Does anyone know a good place to shop for fashionable and trendy muumuus? I'm going to need that website info, please.

Is it just me, or is 2020 not making a very good impression -– pandemics, tornados, wildfires, murder hornets, earthquakes, protests, riots, tropical depressions – and all that in the first half of the year. I'm a little frightened to think about the second half. Masks, gloves, and hand sanitizer are the latest in accessories to complement any wardrobe. What in the world is going on?

One of my mother's most-used phrases and words of wisdom throughout my life has been "This too shall pass." There have been times when I just needed to hear her say "This too shall pass" because it had a certain amount of comfort in it. There have been times when I knew what her next words were going to be, and I did not want to hear that. I wanted some sympathy, some "Bless your heart," and I got a good, hearty dose of "Suck it up, Cyndi. This too shall pass."

I never used those words as a mother raising my own children. Although, I will admit I have used her like a loaded weapon and encouraged them to call their Granna with their issue because I knew exactly what they would get. Probably not fair, but it has brought a smile to my face when I knew hearing it from her meant so much more than from me. She is a wise and loving woman, and I am truly blessed to still have her love and guidance just a few mere miles over the road.

I've thought about those words during this pandemic. I've heard those words from others, as well. I have taken comfort in the thought that, yes, this will surely pass. And just about the time I got to maybe feeling a little sorry for myself -- for instance, that maybe I misunderstood the initial instructions and I wasn't supposed to go home and gain 19 pounds -- I could hear that still, small voice whisper, "Suck it up, Cyndi. You know what to do. This will surely pass."

I pray that we have all been able to look inward at who and what we are and gained some perspective and perhaps maybe even noticed something we didn't really know or want to see about ourselves during this time period where we suddenly had all the time in the world to do all those things we said we would do if given the time. I hope we can all take the comfort of those four words – This too shall pass -- along with the challenge to get up and do something constructive, and be able to look back on this season of our lives and be proud of ourselves, of our profession, and of our nation because "This too shall pass."

A few things I have seen and witnessed from this time of quarantine is an outpouring of kindness. I have seen people "slowing their roll," as I like to call it, to spend time with family, to offer help to people in need, to get creative and see where the talents and gifts they have can be used to the benefit of others and to offer up support and words of kindness and affirmation to a group of essential and necessary people in the medical field. I have seen people coming together for a solution, or at least a way to survive, in a very unsure and scary time in our country. I have seen court reporters reach out and help each other, encourage each other, and be a part of the solution, not creating a bigger problem. I have seen NCRA from the very beginning step up to the plate with information and training and assistance and all with the mindset of helping the profession of court reporting survive and put our best foot forward and be prepared for the new normal we all are facing. I have never been more proud to be a 35-year member of NCRA than now. I am proud that Alabama has a strong voice in our nation. I am proud of our past leadership in ACRA that has worked so hard to build genuine relationships within our state government that when the time came and court reporters needed to be able to swear witnesses and get back to work, we were able to make those phone calls and work with our state leaders and get that task accomplished.

As we begin to think about the next phase of our "new normal" as it's been coined, my personal prayer is that we all Remember how things were – fast-paced, never time for anything but what had to be done, rush, rush, rush – Remember that feeling of uncertainty during the time that we were either home entirely or were still working and trying actively to avoid the coronavirus. And as the world as we know it has begun to reopen, Remember to keep it all in perspective. There's really nothing more important than family. There's really always time to help someone out. There's really always time for friends. There really are opportunities to help fellow reporters in a time of need without worry. Remember to put our best foot forward and always be a positive part of the solution to a situation and never a part in creating the problem. I truly hope that our new normal involves a great deal of loving kindness and humility. And whether you need that comforting motherly encouragement or you need a swift kick in the pants to get you back on track, always Remember …

This too shall pass.

When the Pandemic Hit

By Janet Smith, CCR • Treasurer, ACRA

As an official court reporter in Lee County for almost twenty-five years, in which I have to be in court every day eight to four-thirty (yes, we have hearings every day), I have found that my time was/is very chaotic. So, needless to say, when the pandemic "hit", I was, like everybody else in the world, shattered, lost, many more words come to mind, but everybody is feeling it.

My parents both being in their eighties and my father having to go to chemo every three weeks (no end date as of yet), my Judge let me stay home for my parents' safety. I have now been home since the end of March. April has flown by to me because I have been working on a capital case and then two more appeals. Zoom hearings started and I have done at least four to five Zoom hearings a day, which have been interesting.

Now being May 1st and getting the letter saying the Courts might open May 15, I don't know how to feel. I am ready to go back to work, but am I? I am ready for the chaos. I am ready to see my work family. I am ready for hugs. I am ready for laughter at lunch when two or three of us meet in the conference room for lunch. I am ready to listen to my friends' problems. I am ready for them to listen to mine. Sure, we have the cell phone, sure, we have Zoom, but nothing is like seeing your friends and having them say, hey, this…. and me saying yes, this… Friends you have at work, when you are talking to them and they finish your sentences for you, or they start to say something and you finish their sentences for them is hilariously funny sometimes.

Then you think what an amazing time you have had at home with your parents and the laughter and the tears and the fears and the memories that you are making, you wonder about getting back to work. Then there is the whole money factor. It makes me wish I had paid more attention in my Dave Ramsey course. I know I still have his book and will be implementing his plan.

One thing I do know and will always feel blessed is the friends we have made along our journey called life has been uplifting and amazing.

Court reporter friends that become lifelong friends with other court reporters understand the dismay that we feel when our jobs cancel or when a payment hasn't been made. We understand when you are having a bad day. We are always there for each other when we have questions or "hissy" fits or just need a shoulder. I know since I joined ACRA that I have been blessed. Every person is the same. Every person feels joy, sadness, laughter, and tears. If we just make the time to "shout out" to our fellow members and non-members, everyone will see that we can do anything or be anything we want to be as long as we are there for each other.

So be blessed, stay happy, and remember your fellow reporters are just an email, phone call, or Zoom away, if you need encouragement or a hug or a pat on the shoulder.

Laura's Life During Covid-19

By Laura Nichols • ACRA Member

Unbelievable! So many things cancelling: depos, trips, vacation to Greece, parties. Then the realization that I could really accomplish things if I set out to with all this free time: plans, goals, some accomplishments, mixed with lots of TV series, binge eating, and unstructured days.

It is a good thing that my husband Tony has always been my best friend too. We have enjoyed lots of walks and exercising outdoors, reading books, and watching TV until the wee hours. Tony has made so many lattes for us that he could compete in a barista contest.

After about a month of isolation, we decided to visit our daughter and her family in Oklahoma. We packed up the car with Clorox wipes and gloves for the gas stations along the way and headed out on our 13-hour drive to her home. We have had a great two weeks playing games, hiking and being Papa and LaLou to our two and four-year-old grands.

I brought my court reporting equipment in our SUV, all set to be available for Zoom depos I had prepared for, but the blitzkrieg of remote depos does not seem to have hit Alabama yet. I have only reported one so far, but I am hopeful that bookings will pick up quickly with the reopening of law offices and businesses.

If free time continues, I plan to do some sewing when I get home, redecorating our guest room, maybe practice my piano and work on developing more self-control. I have taken pleasure by bringing smiles to friends' days by posting funny court reporting quips on Facebook and sharing a bit of our wonderful profession with them.

I am ready to have a bit of the new normal or old normal kick in, for I have realized that what really brings the most structure to my days is my zest for reporting!

Dear Firm Owners,

Our interns need your help. Do you have a remote deposition or a remote trial that would allow you to have an intern participate along with you?

COVID-19 has created challenges for schools as they try to place their students on internships, with most in-person opportunities being suspended. It is important that we keep internship opportunities available for our students so they can meet their graduation timelines.

If you cover remote depositions or remote trials that would allow you to have an intern participate along with the professional reporter, please email NCRA at schools@ncra.org and they will relay the opportunity to schools who have students in need of intern placements.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

COVID-19 DIARY

By Sabrina Lewis, CCR, RPR • Vice President, ACRA

January 2020 | A New Job Brings New Responsibilities

I was elected vice president at the annual ACRA conference. Taking on a new board position is like getting a job promotion. I appreciate that my superiors and peers (you, the ACRA membership) trust my abilities, but I am a little nervous about taking on an expanded role. One of my new jobs is maintaining the membership database. Did I mention that it has been 20 years since I used Excel?

March 2020 | I Never Knew the Word "Challenge" Had So Many Meanings

In the wake of COVID-19, the Earth seemed to momentarily stop turning on its axis.

Stay at Home mandates have been instituted. The NCRA board of directors, CAT software companies, and equipment vendors used every means of social media known to man to educate court reporters on ways to provide remote court reporting services. Reporters who were already CART providers and/or captioners stepped up to answer questions and offer solutions to their judicial counterparts. Firm owners offered to train lawyers and their staffs on how to use videoconferencing.

Court reporters are accustomed to facing challenges. I have never been prouder to be a member of NCRA and ACRA.

April 2020 | We Have A New Normal

To protect litigants' constitutional rights and to ensure the safety of court personnel, my courthouse begins conducting proceedings via video teleconferencing. Incarcerated defendants log in from their jails or prisons. Court staff, lawyers, and witnesses log in from their individual locations. Sometimes there are connectivity glitches. That is not surprising when you consider there are millions of people around the world simultaneously trying to access the Internet.

May 2020 | Don't Sweat the Small Stuff (And It's All Small Stuff)

Rush-hour traffic is a distant memory. There are no long lines inside of Starbucks.

Last Saturday, the ACRA board held our regularly scheduled meeting via Zoom videoconferencing. The next day, we again utilized Zoom to virtually attend NCRA's six-hour Leadership training.

Some courthouses are reopening for in-person hearings. I am working on transcripts and using some of my quarantine time to tackle long-overdue chores. And I am watching YouTube to learn how to use Excel.

RISING TO THE COVID CHALLENGE

By Jennifer L Kissic • President-Elect, ACRA

As the COVID-19 National Health Pandemic became a reality in the United States, court reporters throughout the country have been faced with a new challenge. Not only did this virus bring health concerns, but we were also faced with how we could do our job remotely and do it effectively. Reporters were challenged with the task of how to do our job remotely and have been bombarded with new terminology. These terms include "social distancing," "Coronavirus," "pandemic," "lock down," "essential workers," and our least favorite, "quarantine." Personally, my least favorite phrase is "the new normal." Let's not forget "Zoombombing" (hijacking a Zoom videoconference) and "WFH" (working from home).

As always, we as court reporters rise to the occasion when faced with a challenge. We are OVERCOMERS!!!! Court reporters love a challenge. Whether we are freelance, caption, federal official, or state official, we are challenged mentally and physically on each job. One day we may have a 30 minute to 1 hour deposition or hearing with attorneys who are great to work with and witnesses who speak proper English, while the next job is a week to two-week long trial or deposition in a complex case that involves parties who are at each other's throats. Maybe you have a deposition of a Polish radiological physicist who barely opens his mouth when speaking his radiological jargon in his thick Polish accent and clicked his teeth together when talking. Ugh. I wanted to quit. I might have cried. I thought I was the worst court reporter in the world. I might have wanted to quit, but I put my big girl panties on and sucked it up and got the job done. It is jobs like these that not only make us better reporters, but also make us appreciate the "easy" jobs. My point being that as we are faced with the new challenges involving COVID-19, these will not only make us better reporters, but make us appreciate things the way they used to be.

In addition to rising to the occasion when it has come to our jobs as court reporters, many parents have been challenged with the task of homeschooling their children as schools were closed. Parents now have a new appreciation for our kids' teachers, parents who homeschool, and people who work from home. It's not everything we thought it would be. We have all learned how much we depend on restaurants after the Coronavirus hit. Some of us became better cooks, while others just barely got by with Ramen noodles. Either way, we are survivors. We have all stuck together and become stronger as a result of the Coronavirus. Many entities offered punctuation and other type of online educational opportunities free or at a discounted rate.

In conclusion, I want to personally thank all of our essential workers, parents who worked from home and homeschooled your kids, teachers who taught your own kids and were there for the parents who were essential and still working, IT experts for helping the technically challenged, and our businesses/associations who offered these free services to help people make the most of their newly found free time. I hope everyone's honey-do lists are done, you are TikTok savvy, and you and your family are safe and healthy! 'Til the 'Rona is over, don't be a Covidiot and we will make it through this together!!!!
